Abstract: Children living on the streets are among the most vulnerable groups in society, and they face a range of challenges that threaten their health, safety, and well-being. As such, they have specific rights that are protected by international law. The rights include right to protection, right to education, right to healthcare, right to food and shelter, right to identity, right to participation and right to non-discrimination. The main objective of the study is to know about the causes of children to live in streets and also to prevent them and the research method used here is the random sampling method and the sample size is 200. The sample frame is tamilnadu. It is found that children living in the streets are the more vulnerable people in the society and the rights of the children and being ensured by the state. protection and promotion of the rights of children is crucial for their well-being and development. Children have the right to be protected from all forms of violence, abuse, neglect, and exploitation. They also have the right to education, healthcare, and an adequate standard of living. Governments have a duty to create and enforce laws and policies that protect the rights of children, including those who are vulnerable and marginalized, such as children living on the streets.
