

Autobiography: Dawn of Women's Life Narratives

Charanjeet Kaur¹ and Dr. Meenu²

Research Scholar, Department of English¹

Assistant Professor, Department of English²

OPJS University, Rajasthan, India

Abstract: At the same time, it represents voice of women, which occurs so rarely in such profound manner at this point of time. The very idea that her voice appears in the form of a text is very significant because writing not only gives a name to a hitherto anonymous voice, it also provides the text and the author an element of posterity. And thus it becomes a significant tool to study larger structures through these minor narratives. Domestic abuse is a problem that affects all vulnerable communities, not only Dalit ones. The majority of women deal with it as a relatively common societal issue. The main reasons of domestic violence include men's patriarchal nature, the dowry system, economic weakness, and sexual orientation. In the text, the author brings up the problems with hand scavenging. The fact that Dalit households clean 7.9 lakh public and private dry latrines is still the hardest reality. Dalit ladies clear human waste with their bare hands, disregarding safety precautions. Dalit women go door to door in rural areas to collect human garbage. One may see how they continue to operate without safety equipment in one of the episodes of Satyamev Jayate, a television show based on manual scavengers.

Keywords: Dalit, women autobiography, Life narratives, Memoir.

REFERENCES

- [1]. Ambedkar, B.R. (2007), Annihilation of Caste. New Delhi: Critical Quest. (2011), Reminiscences of Untouchability. New Delhi: Critical Quest. (2013), Triumph of Brahminism. New Delhi: Critical Quest.
- [2]. Augustine, Saint (2001), Confessions (translation by Jay P. Green). Lafayette: Sovereign Grace.
- [3]. Baumgart, Reinhard (1984), „Das Leben—kein Traum? Vom Nutzen und Nachteil einer autobiographischen Literatur“, in Herbert Heckmann (ed.), Literatur aus dem Leben. Autobiographische Tendenzen in der deutschsprachigen Gegenwartsdichtung. München, Wien: Hanser, pp. 8–28. [„Life—Not a Dream? On Advantage and Disadvantage of Autobiographical Literature“, in Herbert Heckmann, (ed.), Literature and Life. Autobiographical Tendencies in Contemporary German Literature].
- [4]. Copeman, Jacob & Ikegame Aye; The guru in South Asia: New Interdisciplinary perspectives, Routledge, 2002
- [5]. Eakin, Jaun Paul; Fictions In Autobiography : Studies in the Art of Self-Invention , Princeton University, 1988
- [6]. Frazier, Jessica; The continuum companion to Hindu studies, Continuum international group of publishing, 2011
- [7]. Gandhi, M.K. (2008), An Autobiography or The Story of my Experiments with Truth. Ahmedabad: Navajivan.
- [8]. Kamble, Baby (2011), The Prisons we Broke (translation by Maya Pandit, 3rd edition). Delhi: Orient BlackSwan.
- [9]. Leslie, Julia(ed.); Myth and Myth making: Continuous evolution in Indian tradition, Curzon Press, 1996
- [10]. Malhotra, Anshu; Piro and the Gulabdasis; Oxford University Press, 2017
- [11]. Muschg, Adolf (1984), „Wie echt ist das Ich in der Literatur?“, [How pure is the I in Literature?] in Hermann Heckmann (ed.), Literatur aus dem Leben. Autobiographische Tendenzen in der deutschsprachigen Gegenwartsdichtung. München, Wien: Hanser, pp. 29–38.
- [12]. Wagner-Egelhaaf, Martina (2000), Autobiographie. Stuttgart, Weimar: Metzler