Abstract: This paper aims to explore and analyze the political socialization patterns among higher education students in both urban and rural settings, with a specific focus on the context of Tripura. Political socialization is a complex process through which individuals acquire political beliefs, attitudes, and values. The educational environment plays a crucial role in shaping these political orientations. By examining the differences between urban and rural areas, this study seeks to uncover unique aspects that contribute to the political socialization of higher education students in Tripura.
