Abstract: This abstract explores the transformative forces shaping global trade in the 21st century. It delves into the changing landscape of international commerce, including the impact of technological advancements, trade policies, and geopolitical shifts. The abstract highlights the challenges faced by nations and industries as they adapt to these changes while also emphasizing the opportunities that arise from a more interconnected world. It offers insights into the growing role of e-commerce, sustainability, and digital trade, underscoring the need for adaptive strategies in a rapidly evolving global trade environment. The COVID-19 pandemic has ushered in a new era of global trade, characterized by both unprecedented challenges and remarkable opportunities. This research paper delves into the evolving dynamics of global trade in the post-COVID world, examining the multifaceted impact of the pandemic on international commerce. We explore how supply chain disruptions, changes in consumer behaviour, and shifts in government policies have reshaped the global trade landscape. In addition, we investigate the emerging opportunities, such as the accelerated adoption of digital technologies and the potential for more resilient and diversified supply chains. By analysing these challenges and opportunities, this paper aims to provide insights for businesses, policymakers, and researchers navigating the complex terrain of global trade in the wake of the pandemic.
