Abstract: Swami Vivekananda envisioned education as the manifestation of perfection already in man. His philosophy emphasized character building, strength, self-confidence, spiritual realization, and social responsibility. Central to his educational thought was the concept of "Man-Making Education," which he believed was essential for both individual development and national progress. This paper explores the philosophical underpinnings, goals, and practical implications of Vivekananda's educational ideals. Using a qualitative approach through review and content analysis, the study reflects on the contemporary relevance of his vision in the modern educational system.
