Abstract: The significance of women's representation in the judiciary is multifaceted. In addition to promoting inclusivity within the legal system and fostering a representative approach to adjudication, the provision of inspiration to future female judges serves as a sustained source of motivation for them to pursue their objectives. Although there has been a historical disparity in the level of equality within the court, efforts are being made to address this issue. This is seen via the recent adoption of a United Nations General Assembly Resolution that designates 10 March as the International Day of Women Judges. The Resolution, which has been formulated by the State of Qatar, serves as concrete evidence of a noticeable and favorable transformation taking place in many geographical areas.
