

A Review on Formulation and Evaluation of Herbal Hair Serum

Kalekar Vaishali Dhananjay¹, Gosavi G. P.², Mukke Sanika Venkat³, Narhare Vaibhavi Tukaram⁴

Student, B Pharmacy, Shivlingeshwar College of Pharmacy, Almala, India^{1,2,3,4}

Assistant Professor, Department of Pharmaceutical chemistry, Shivlingeshwar College of pharmacy, Almala, India²

Abstract: The scalp is a crucial component for hair growth, and human hair is regarded as one of the symbols of beauty in people. It is the layer of soft tissue skin that covers the skull and the hair-growing region of the head. One type of cosmetic product that has a high concentration of active ingredients in its formula is serum, which gives the deeper layers of the skin intense nutrition and a non-greasy finish that is good for skin. One of the essential components that contributes to the overall elegance of the body is hair, an epidermal byproduct. A few issues that people generally deal with are hair loss, dandruff, lice, split ends, and gray hair. A hair has three parts: the root, the shaft, and the tip. Melanin, the pigment responsible for hair color, stops functioning in aging people, causing their hair to turn white

Keywords: Hair serum ,Herbal product , Hair care , Plant based , Hair growth