Abstract: Corruption is a global problem that affects countries in many ways. It includes actions like bribery, stealing public money, and abusing power for personal gain. Corruption weakens governments, increase poverty, and creates unfair system where resources don't reach to the people who need them most. Some countries struggle more with corruption because of poor accountability. Efforts to fight corruption focus on improving transparency, and involving citizens in holding leaders accountable. Solving corruption requires strong teamwork, honest leadership, and a commitment to fairness to create better futures for everyone. Corruption distorts resource allocation, increasing inequality, and hampers social progress by diverting funds meant for public services. Its effects go beyond national borders, creating problems in international trade, foreign investments, and global security. To fight corruption, countries need strong laws transparent leadership and active involvement from the public. Solving this issue is key to achieving fairness, development, and peace worldwide.
