

Community Engagement and Partnership in Education

Dr. Gitanjali Choudhury
Principal

West Guwahati College of Education, Guwahati, Assam

Abstract: It is remarkable how the community is involved in improving education. Due of the diverse socioeconomic backgrounds, students have varying opinions on the institutions. Through participation in numerous events, the institution's administration can use their differences as milestones for the institution's future. Members of the community are invited to visit the institution to express their opinions about various aspects of their daily lives. Educational institutions can also use MOUs to engage with the community. The minds of pupils might be stimulated with new ideas for their future by the community's involvement with the institutions.

Students' minds might be stimulated with new ideas for their future by the community's involvement with the institutions. The multi-community of Chandra village, which is close to Guwahati, and the West Guwahati Teachers' Training College have an MOU with that head of the community. This paper will showcase the numerous initiatives that they have undertaken. This study aims to examine how the 267 members of the community share their perspectives on their means of livelihood through a variety of survey-based activities with the 100 college student-teacher candidates. The paper will cover the various fields in which community members work as well as the ways in which the community benefits from the student teacher-trainees

Keywords: Community, Engazement, Participation

