IV. CONCLUSION

Mumbai has more than 25 tourism management colleges offering various courses and duration of degree programme is three or four years. Since these programmes are practicals oriented, more emphasis isgiven to practicals than theory part. All educational institutions have closed for students from March 2020 after the COVID-19 pandemic was declared. It is difficult to conduct online practicals of hotel management programmes because it involves lots of practice and required resources are not available at home. Online practicals of food production, F&B Service, Housekeeping and Front office subjects were conducted and in some of the college's students were asked to write same in their journal of respective subject.

Very Few students liked online practicals because of its convenience and time saving aspects. Most of the students have agreed that conducting online parcticals is not very good idea due to lack of exposure and face to face interaction during its conduct and also discipline and motivation is lacking during the course content which was shown during online format. We can conclude from data analysis that online practicals were not very effective.
