I. INTRODUCTION

In any business scenario, bonuses and incentives are two essential elements that the employers and the management team need to consider. Incentives and rewards are given to employees who perform exceptionally well and work beyond their limitations. These factors act as a form of motivation for the workers. The employees whose performance is better than other employees receive a bigger bonus or incentive than the others. The 'built-in incentive" for any workers or the employee's demands high performance from the business or the organization. Gifts can be of various types. Performance bonuses are given to employees who perform well in the organization; year-end bonuses are given to employees who worked dedicatedly throughout the year and do not change the organization. These bonuses are given for their loyalty. Bonuses and employee help the organizations or businesses to retain their employees. Gifts will ensure that employees and workers get a feeling of attachment with the company. Rewards refer to all forms of financial returns and tangible services and benefits an employee receives as part of an employment relationship. It is the benefits that arise from performing a task, rendering a service or discharging a responsibility. According to Searle (1990), rewards can be categorized into two broad areas, namely extrinsic rewards and intrinsic rewards. Extrinsic rewards are usually financial or tangible rewards which include pay, promotion, interpersonal rewards, bonuses and benefits (Zaman, 2012). Stoner and Freeman (1996) defined intrinsic rewards as the psychological reward that is experienced directly by an employee. With the deregulation of performance appraisal and awards, agencies have been given the authority and freedom to manage performance effectively. But delegation, deregulation, and simplification also mean increased accountability. Actually, employee performance is a term typical to the Human Resource field where employee performance can refer to the ability of employees to achieve organizational goals more effectively and efficiently. It involves all aspects which directly or indirectly affect and relate to the work of the employees. For performance to be effective, employers should recognize the regiment.

Desires and needs of the employees. According to Koontz (1988), ways in which employee performance can be increased includes proper incentive systems which may be financial or nonfinancial. Financial incentives include salaries, allowances, overtime payment, bonus and wages, while non-financial incentives include promotion, medical allowance, training, transport, subsidized housing and meals. This should be after identifying the needs and desires of employees that can be satisfied to increased performance. This could be the reason why the government, instead of giving bonuses at the end of the month introduced the Performance- Based Bonus, an incentive given to employees based on their condition to the accomplishment of their Department's overall targets and commitments. Having definite rewards for exemplary work can inspire public servants to perform better. This can even motivate their co-workers in their own units to perform well, too. Altogether, such a system is designed to encourage improved performance and better accountability, in line with ensuring the accomplishment of the Administration's priority development agenda. More importantly, however, the PBB seeks to transform the management of agency and employee performance to foster a culture of accountable public service, as well as produce concrete and visible improvements in the delivery of public goods and services. The ultimate aim of the PBB—besides instituting a genuine meritocracy in Philippine government—is to serve the Filipino public more effectively and efficiently.

A clear mechanism and a detailed structure is missing as there are some employees who are still not aware of the current Bonus system as to how their performance are being judged and thus they stay comparatively less motivated than others.

There are still some drawbacks which make some employees to fall under the category of neutral because:

- WCL COMPANY fails at recognizing the employee's areas of improvement.
- Poor rewards and recognition for the employee's hard work.
- Poor incentive structure that doesn't contribute in helping them to feel motivated.

A good structure of equal promotional activities helps WCL COMPANY to create an environment of competitiveness amongst the employees that acts as a catalyst to improve the overall productivity.

Majority of the employees prefer monetary incentives over non-monetary incentives. More than half of the employee's strength thinks that management actually puts efforts in motivating the employees and also they show a sense of satisfaction towards the current performance appraisal system of WCL COMPANY

V. SUGGESTIONS

WCL COMPANY should continue using the current Bonus system or make necessary changes in the future if needed as the majority of the employees are satisfied and feel motivated with it.

WCL COMPANY should have a structured plan of action to deliver feedback to its employees so that the employees can feel motivated towards work. A proper feedback mechanism can help the employees to recognize the areas in which they are lacking and also help them to formulate ways in which they can eliminate those obstacles.

A fair and transparent rewards and recognition system should be made to recognize the hard work of the employees. This system should be unbiased and should entirely be based on employee's performance. This will ensure a sense of competitiveness amongst the teams and will make them work and contribute with the best of their ability.

The management should plan on recruiting more employees for work as suggested by the current employees. It should have a proper manpower system that can recruit the required number of workforce at the required time. This will ensure
