I. INTRODUCTION

Freelancing in India has already become popular enough to catch hold of a large segment of job-seeking, independent professionals looking forward to learning new ideas and explore more work genres. Freelancing in India sees a remarkable growth, giving a new voice to the modern, hard-working youth from different aspects of Indian society.

If statistics are to be believed, India is the home to the second largest number of freelancers standing next to the USA. The number of freelancers in India is whopping 15 million individuals, working independently in wide array of sectors like IT and programming, finance, sales and marketing, designing, animation, videography, content and academic writing etc. Reports hold that one-in-four freelancers in the world is from India.

While a major part of freelancer's income comes from foreign sources, mostly Europe and the US, the rising culture of Startup and entrepreneurship in India, contributes handsomely as well when it comes to measuring the pay scales. As per a detailed study, by 2020, 50% of workers are expected to go freelance. Currently, there are 15 million freelancers in India. Again as per some reports, the number of freelancers in India will grow to whopping $20-30 billion by 2025.

While in the entertainment industry, the term "artist" usually refers to musicians and actors, in the fine arts industry an artist could be a painter or a sculptor, and in the digital media industry, an artist could be a visual or graphic designer.
- Our website doesn't only include artists and content creators but also the technical workers.

2.3 Scope

Freelancing purely depends on the field in which you want it and the skills you have for it. I have seen freelancers who are running their families and homes by the money they earn online. For every different field there is a different scope. Not like that there will be no scope for a specific thing or skill, but that it will be low or high. Your question's answer is hidden in the thing you are going to start freelancing for. For example, if there is a freelancer in graphic designing and also in poem
