

Importance of English Literature in Education

Vadkar Manish Valjibhai¹ and Ms. Maheshwari G Zala²

Assistant Professor, Department of English, Arts Collage Bhildi, Banaskantha, Gujarat, India¹

Research Scholar, Department of English, Pacific University, Udaipur, Rajasthan, India²

Abstract: The purpose of the research is English literature has long been an important part of the primary and secondary school curriculum in many countries. With the advent of technology and other factors, it is not clear what role, if any, this will play in the future. A study was undertaken to investigate the opinions of educators on the role of English literature in education. The findings support the idea that despite technological advances, educators feel that English literature is still an important part of the primary and secondary school curriculum. Literature can indeed be recognized as a tool for learning. However, the effectiveness of literature in education is not always evident or easily understood. This paper explores how some of literature's strengths can be used to aid language learners and how its weaknesses can be avoided in order to produce the most effective results when using literature for teaching English as a second language (ESL).

Keywords: Education, Literature, students, books

I. INTRODUCTION

Now days for students English literature for education is necessary. They have to read Shakespeare and many other great writers. It helps them to understand the world and to develop emotional intelligence. And of course, it's interesting to study the works of such great writers. Students have to learn English for the sake of education. I think it is necessary for students to study English literature, because studying English literature can make students improve their language skills and develop interest in learning English. For example, listening to songs can make students learn new words and expressions, reading articles can help them learn more idioms, and watching movies can help them understand the culture of English-speaking countries. As a result, students will enjoy learning English and improve their language skills. For students, English literature is one of the most necessary subjects for their future. It can also be a very difficult subject to master, especially because they will not only have to read the text in class but also do a lot of homework. With this paper, give you some useful advice on how you can make it through school with English literature.

Today's students need to be well-read and informed in order to compete in the modern workforce. It's no longer enough to just have a mastery of your native language; you need to be able to interpret and discuss the works of great writers and understand the context in which they were written. Studying English literature can give you this skill, and it gives you something else: an appreciation for the arts that can enrich your life far beyond your own career.

Common knowledge dictates that a person's value to society is in direct proportion to their level of education. To elaborate, the education of an individual plays a vital role in how they see themselves and the world around them. Education also plays a significant role in the development of an individual's potentials and capabilities. The importance of education is reflected in many aspects. For example, many countries have laws where children must attend school until a certain age. This implies that there are consequences to not being educated. In fact, some countries have laws where there are serious consequences to not attending school regularly or not getting your required educational standard (e.g., you can be arrested, fined, etc.).

Writing is one of the most complex art form, and a lot of people claim that writing is impossible to teach. However, many noted teachers and scholars believe that such statements are far from the truth. This is because they have devoted their life to study human communication in general and teaching methodology in particular. One of their primary goals is to understand how students learn best, so that they can become better teachers. A great deal of research has been conducted on the subject, and as a result, we now know more about English as a language than ever before. Some experts believe that through this area of study, a greater understanding of the human mind and psyche has been gained. We will take a look at some of the most important findings in this field below, but first let us consider the reasoning behind these studies in terms of education for English literature.

The English language and its literature have a long history, dating back to the ninth and tenth centuries when the first written English appeared. As the language developed, so did the number of authors creating works in English. Through time, literature became an important part of an educated person's education. Just as important as music and art classes were studies in literature.

Today, literature is still a crucial part of any well-rounded education. From reading classic texts in school to taking university courses on modern American or British authors, reading and studying great works of literature is imperative to developing a well-informed citizenry. After all, how can you understand the world around you if you don't understand the stories that help people understand it? Literature helps us learn more about ourselves and our place in the world through others' experiences and points of view. It also provides insight into other cultures and historical periods.

The importance of English literature cannot be denied. The works of the great authors are as relevant today as they were when they were written. Many of these timeless works have been recognized with prestigious awards, including Nobel and Pulitzer prizes for literature. The exposure to these great works can help develop a lifelong passion for reading and writing in our students. When we allow the best thoughts and ideas from the greatest minds of our time to enter our students' minds, we are preparing them for a life that is rich in thought and filled with possibilities for achievement.

The English Literature has a different role in education. It gives a lot of knowledge about the society and about the literature. It gives a chance for students to improve their writing skills, speaking skills, reading skills, critical thinking skills and so on. There are many types of English Literature books. But it is used for the improving of English language. Books like The Lord of the Rings by JRR Tolkien, Harry Potter by JK Rowling and others are used in schools as a part of their curriculum. Students love to read these books because they have a very nice story line. When you read such books you forget all your worries and enjoy every moment you spend while reading it. You can learn a lot from these books because they discuss so many topics and interesting things which you never thought before. The language is easy to understand, so students can easily read it without any problem. These books make students familiar with different terms, phrases, idioms and so on. These books help them to improve their vocabulary and introduce them to a new world where anything is possible.

As an educationist, my day-to-day work involves spending a lot of time with the English language. Have to read and write endless amounts of essays, stories, poems and plays in order to understand what my students are capable of doing at different levels. Have to know the grammar rules that they need to know. Most importantly, Have to be able to convey this knowledge to them during class and make sure they can apply it correctly. The most important thing when it comes to teaching English is that my students improve their skills in the language.

A great deal of hard work goes into producing high school English literature textbooks. From choosing which works to include, to writing commentary, to reading and evaluating student submissions for the anthology, it's a job that requires many hours of reading and editing. In fact, literary work is so time-consuming that there isn't really a way to include every major author, let alone all the pieces people want to read.

The education system is not just a one way street. The students, who are the receivers, are also the contributors to the development of it. An increasing number of students are inquisitive and have high expectations for their future. They have begun to pay attention to their own strengths and weaknesses and those of their classmates in order to get help from each other. On the other hand, teachers who are running classes tend to be more prepared to meet challenges. They are more engaged with students, which makes them more responsible for what they do in class and also give more chances for students to share their thoughts on various topics.

As a result, English Language effect in Literature Education becomes more influential than before. This is helpful for both teacher and student because it is really hard for foreign teachers to teach students directly in those schools where students' level of English is low and the teaching environment is not supportive enough. But when teachers can use English as a tool to assist students in learning literature, they will find their life much easier and even worthwhile since they can teach more than others by doing this way. In fact, there are numerous advantages for us when we teach literature through English Language effect: One is that we can introduce new words into our language without hesitation.

The English language has been a very important subject in the literary world and especially in the field of education. There is no doubt that the cost of teaching a foreign language has increased many times over the last few years. Even so, students have been able to receive a better education under an educational system which is constantly improving. The main objective of any correspondence program is to provide students with an opportunity to learn about a particular subject outside the classroom. This can be done by simply providing students with information or by actually giving them the opportunity to practice what they have learned in the classroom. With this being said, there is no doubt that learning can take place outside a classroom.

According to the National Council of Teachers of English, "English language arts is a term that refers to the use of skills in reading, writing, speaking, and listening." These skills are commonly taught in schools through the teaching of literature. Although the content of what students learn varies widely depending on the grade level and the school district, most schools around the country teach students at least some elements of classic English literature such as "Beowulf" and "The Canterbury Tales".

II. CONCLUSION

One of the most important aspects of education is being able to read different kinds of literature, especially works that are culturally significant and relate to the society in which we live. While there is a place for non-fiction in education, there is something unique about reading fiction. When we read fiction, we are creating a mental image of the characters and places described. We are brought into an unfamiliar world through words on a page and our minds work to create a new reality from nothing. When you learn how to read literary fiction, you can use it as a tool for understanding human nature and how people react in certain situations. Anyone can benefit from learning how to read literary fiction, whether it's for your own enjoyment or as part of your job or education.

REFERENCES

- [1]. Manakul, Werawan. 2007. "Role of English in Internationalisation of Higher Education: The case of the graduate School of engineering". (socyo.high.hokudai.ac.jp/Journal/J15PDF/No 1513.pdf)
- [2]. Graddol, David 2000. "The Future of English? A guide to forecasting the popularity of the English language in 21st Century". (www.britishcouncil.org/learning/elt/future.pdf)
- [3]. Arıođul, S. 2001. "The Teaching of Reading Through Short Stories in Advanced Classes" Unpublished M.A Thesis. Ankara: Hacettepe University.
- [4]. Collie, J. and S. Slater. 1990. Literature in the Language Classroom: A Resource Book of Ideas and Activities. Cambridge: CUP.
- [5]. Mengü, H.I. 2002. "A Suggested Syllabus for the Drama Teaching Course in ELT Departments". Unpublished M.A Thesis. Ankara: Hacettepe University.
- [6]. Obediat, M. 1997. "Language vs. Literature in English Departments in the Arab World" in English Teaching Forum.